Dear Mr. Raddall,

I do think it was so extremely nice of you to think of sending me your book. I know very well how much my husband admired your writing and, I am enjoying <sup>your book</sup> ~~it~~ tremendously.

I always have such a feeling of affection for Halifax and I shall never forget when we went there at the beginning of the war, and my husband addressed the skippers of the convoy that was going out. I did not, of course, go myself but he was enormously impressed by the whole occasion.

I do think you have done such a wonderful job in writing as you have about Halifax. I think towns are rather like people, they want to be understood and written about in a sympathetic sort of way, and that you have done so well, if I may say so.

Do please let me know if you ever come over here.

Yours very sincerely,

Susan Tweedsmuir
