HOW TO ACHIEVE AMBASSADOR STATUS

THE MAKINGS OF AN AMBASSADOR

You live and work in Halifax or anywhere else in Nova Scotia in a business or profession. You most likely belong to several associations or organizations that plan events, conferences or conventions. We think you've got the credentials to be a special kind of Ambassador. Here's how.

Use your influence to bring your organization to Halifax. By doing so, you become in a very real sense an Ambassador for Halifax and Nova Scotia.

YOUR OWN EMBASSY STAFF

The World Trade and Convention Centre has put together a comprehensive assistance program so that all you have to do is give us the name of your contact or organization. We'll take it from there.

THE CORPS DIPLOMATIQUE

Become a member of a unique "corps diplomatique." We'll honour you and your Association when Halifax and the Convention Centre are selected to host your organization.

Your name will be engraved and permanently displayed on our "Wall of Fame" and your accomplishments will be recognized publicly at a special Ambassador's Banquet. You'll feel good about helping out in a very meaningful way.

For more "emissary" information on the WTCC Ambassador Program, write:

IT'S TEMPTING TO describe the magazine you're now holding as a coordinated reflection of the times in higher education. It would be easy to say that, as pressure mounts against universities to respond to the sometimes unwelcome recommendations of various commissions and adjustments to cutbacks in funding, this magazine's new look and format testifies to a changing temper within the ivory tower. But that wouldn't be the whole story.

Truthfully, we thought Dalhousie Alumni Magazine was due for a change mostly because we feel that a periodical of this nature ought to be a timely and elegant expression of a place where many people spend the best years of their lives. While the old design was, indeed, elegant, it was also 6 years old. And regardless of the external challenges to post-secondary education, a lot can happen within the walls of a university in 6 years — new people, programs, educational approaches, problems and triumphs.

The first and, arguably, riskiest change is the name. We now refer to the periodical as Dalhousie Magazine. The new name reflects the two complementary, but editorially independent, purposes of the periodical: To enlighten alumni about issues and events on campus; and to inform them about the activities of their peers and the association which represents them. The Dalhousie department bears both a fresh look and format.

Dalhousie retains the Up Front on Campus department. But it, too, has been adjusted to accommodate a greater number and variety of news stories.

With this issue, we are introducing three new departments in the magazine. They are: Forum, an extended letters from readers section; Encounter, a section of questions and answers with an individual whose position at the university, ideas or publications merit this type of treatment; and At Last, a light, back-page essay dedicated to an important or interesting year or series of events in the university's past.

We hope you like what you see, and of course we hope you'll tell us what you think.

The Winter, 1990, issue attracted an unusual volume of mail. Reaction to the stories was gratifyingly mixed. A few drew attention to factual errors in published articles. More intriguing, however, were complaints from one reader (reprinted, in part, on the following page) about the heavy male bias in the issue. She has a point. It's the editorial policy of this magazine to celebrate excellence in both male and female members of the university community.

Q-Fever, OPEN and passive discrimination

For some reason the Dalhousie Alumni Magazine is sent to our Convocation Office, not to mine. Could that be changed please? It seems to me to be one of the best Canadian alumni magazines.

I've just seen the Winter 1990 issue. It's 10 years since I came back to Australia, first to set up the Alumni Office at the University of Melbourne and then to set up the new one here (we in Australia have been extraordinarily slow at getting our alumni organized).

As one who spent many years in Toronto in the '60s and '70s as a student, professor and head of department at the University of Toronto, my hackles also went up at the mention of your (editor's earlier) article in The Globe and Mail. I guess I must like harlots. They are much more interesting than provincial drudges. So consider yourself properly chastised by one who still considers himself a Torontonian.

Trevor Wigney,
Director, The Alumni Office,
The University of Western Australia,
Nedlands, Australia

I read with interest the article regarding Dr. Tom Marrie and his work with Q-Fever (Winter 1990).

I must admit, I was a bit puzzled by the statement that The New Yorker Magazine knew about Marrie's work in Q-Fever and local media did not. The public relations department of the Victoria General Hospital has generated publicity about Dr. Marrie and his work with Q-Fever. After the issuance of our news release on Feb. 2, 1989, and subsequent story in our quarterly community newsletter, the Victoria General Special, local media picked up on the story and as I recall, we had a fair bit of radio and television coverage.

Chris Hansen,
Director of Public Relations,
Victoria General Hospital,
Halifax, N.S.

I was pleased to see the article on the Ocean Production Enhancement Network in the Winter 1990 issue of the Dalhousie Alumni Magazine. Dalhousie is to be commended for the leadership shown by Dr. Robert Fournier and Dr. Howard Clark during the application process.

Dalhousie is, however, only one of several institutions which are participating in a genuinely integrated research program under the auspices of the Ocean Production Enhancement Network (OPEN). It is important for us now to focus on the co-operation between institutions and individual scientists which will make it possible for us to conduct this important and ambitious research program. In this context, the fact that the network's secretariat is located at Dalhousie should not be deemed to lend special emphasis to the university's role in the network.

I regret that the article did not mention that the program leader of the network is Dr. William Leggett, Dean of Science at McGill University. Dr. Leggett will oversee the scientific program of the network and will provide leadership to network scientists.

I was also concerned about the apparent suggestion that Dalhousie scientists would be involved in the investigation of "antifreeze" compounds in cod... This work will be conducted by Dr. Garth Fletcher and his colleagues at Memorial University.

Christine Nielsen,
Executive Director, OPEN,
Dalhousie University,
Halifax, N.S.

I was delighted that your editorial in the most recent issue of Dalhousie Alumni Magazine (Winter 1990), was so forthright in accepting the responsibility for how a magazine reflects the biases and beliefs of the editor. I assume that you will undertake to make the necessary improvements to ensure that the blatant sexism of this issue will not occur in subsequent issues.

Of the 13 images of people in the body of the magazine (excluding advertising copy) 11 are of men. In addition, six of these images show men with their "tools" and in the case of Fournier, illustrating in his gesture his activist personality. In contrast, of the two images of women, only one image is of a woman by herself and it is the classic head and shoulders passive shot.

The issue is the result of an editorial policy which appears indifferent to reproducing the wider social discrimination that values and honors the contributions of women and men in unequal ways.

MEDJUCK LIBRARY GIFT SUPPORTS JEWISH STUDIES

Dalhousie University is pleased to announce a donation to the Dalhousie University Library for the purchase of library materials in support of the Medjuck collection for Jewish studies. This donation has been made by Ralph, Harold and Franklyn Medjuck in memory of their parents, Blanche and Irving Medjuck, in recognition of the opportunity that Dalhousie University has provided them and the contribution the university has made to Jewish and non-Jewish scholars in Atlantic Canada.

The Medjuck family has been associated with Dalhousie University for over 70 years, represented by three generations.

Thus far the library has acquired over 400 volumes in history, philosophy, religious studies, literature, politics, sociology, classical works and medicine.

DALHOUSIE APPOINTS FIRST EXEC-IN-RESIDENCE

Pierre Vallée, former president and chief executive officer of Peat Marwick Stevenson & Kellog management consultants, has spent the past academic year at Dalhousie as the university's first executive-in-residence.

Vallée, who has also attended classes, has occupied much of his time advising students in Dalhousie's management studies program. The 48-year-old Montreal resident said he had originally planned to attend the Massachusetts Institute of Technology but changed his mind in favor of Dal.

Vallée decided to take a year off from the world of corporate mergers and professional consulting for health reasons. "It's refreshing looking at cases through the kids' eyes," he said at the time of his appointment to the non-salaried position. He added that he tries to help boost students' confidence in making the move from the classroom.

McLUHAN WINNERS

Two graduates and a former lecturer at the School of Education have received Marshall McLuhan Teaching Awards.

Kenneth Langille and Mark DeWolf each walked away with $2,500 and a Marshall McLuhan medal for developing and using computer systems in their courses. Loretta Cooper, who earned a master's of education degree at Dalhousie, was one of the recipients of the prize in Newfoundland.

Langille, who holds a bachelor of education from the university, received his award for a database for a law course he teaches at Yarmouth Consolidated High School.

DeWolf, a former lecturer at Dalhousie, won his award for developing an interactive computer network for use in a literature course he gives at J.L. Illsley High School in Spryfield, N.S.

DAL WINS GRANT TO PROBE GLOBAL WARMING

With a $2 million grant from federal Government agencies, four researchers at Dalhousie are embarking on a five-year study of global warming and marine meteorology.

Environment Canada and the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council are committing the money to cover salaries. Team members, two of whom have just arrived at Dalhousie, will comprise the university's new Atmospheric Sciences Program, dedicated to investigating the physical processes associated with climate change.

Petr Chylek, atmospheric physicist and program chair, joins the university as a professor with a joint appointment in the departments of Oceanography and Physics. He was previously a professor at the University of Oklahoma.

William Hyde also joins Dalhousie this summer, after leaving his position as a research associate at the Climate System Research Program at Texas A&M University. Hyde will study global circulation models, microcosmic representations of weather and climate systems.

Meanwhile, Dalhousie assistant professors Owen Hertzman and Glen Lesins will study storm systems and the physics of clouds, respectively.

DEBATERS THRIVE THANKS TO FUND

Dalhousie's award-winning Sodales Debating Society, which has endured shortages of cash if not self-esteem, can look forward to a more financially secure future from now on.

The group, which took top honors in the 1990 Canadian National Debating Championships in March, will receive the income from more than $100,000 in a special fund established late last year to help maintain the university's century-old student debating traditions.

The fund, created in the memory of John R. Grant (BA'64, LLB'65), who was an active member of Sodales, is the brainchild of a group of law alumni and former members of Parliament, Stewart McInnes and George Cooper, and commerce alumnus and former Dalhousie board of governors' chairman A. Gordon Archibald.

Said Archibald: "Our objective was to raise $75,000, and we seem to have done pretty well." He indicated that about 60 per cent of donations and pledges came from individuals and organizations in Nova Scotia."

Sodales president Tim Daley said the society was "delighted with the support that's been shown... We now look forward to spending less time worrying about money and more time concentrating on duplicating and increasing the level of success... We couldn't possibly be happier."

Daley, a law student, and fellow society member Laura Stewart, a chemistry student, established perfect 6-0 records in regular and quarter final rounds of this year's debating championships. Earlier in the year, the society won the Hart House Invitational Tournament in Toronto and the Atlantic championships.

CONGRATULATIONS!

Dr. Betty Bednarski of Dalhousie's French department has received this year's coveted Gabrielle Roy Prize for her book, Autour de Ferron: littérature, traduction, altérité (Toronto, GREF, 1989). The prize is presented annually by the Association for Canadian and Quebec Literature for excellence in the field of literary criticism.

ROSS TWICE HONORED THIS SPRING

Malcolm Ross, professor emeritus of English at Dalhousie, has received the prestigious Diplôme d'honneur for 1990 presented by the Canadian Conference of the Arts.

As well, the founder and general editor of the New Canadian Library Series has been awarded his seventh honorary degree: a Doctor of Sacred Letters from Trinity College, University of Toronto.

The Diplôme d'honneur is presented annually to the individual who, in the opinion of the judges, has demonstrated exemplary service to the arts in Canada. Established in 1954, when the first award was presented to Governor General Vincent Massey, the Diplôme has gone to artists and arts community figures such as Glenn Gould, Gabrielle Roy, Maureen Forrester and Robertson Davies.

The Canadian Conference of the Arts is the nation's major arts advocacy group, established in 1944 when a group of professional artists marched on Parliament Hill to demand government support of the arts.

Ross, who received his PhD in 1941 from Cornell University, has played a central role in shaping and defining Canada's cultural traditions through his writing, teaching and editing of the New Canadian Library Series of books.

REMEMBERING CHANCELLOR COHEN

The following anecdote about Reuben Cohen's student days at Dalhousie was prepared by George Curtis of the Faculty of Law, The University of British Columbia. Curtis was a friend and fellow student of Cohen's at Dal during the mid-1940s.

"From impecunious law student without enough money in his final year to pay his board bill to the end of the term, to chancellor of his university is a long mile.

Reuben Cohen, adamant that his landlady should be paid on time, was in my room at the Forrest Building seeking my advice. There were no student loans in those days, nor Dean's Funds for emergencies. The cupboard was bare. Might I have a suggestion?"

As Secretary of Senate, I had learned that the Dennis Essay Prize, given to encourage the art of writing, had gone begging for some time; the $200 prize was too modest to attract entries."

Why not shoot an arrow into the air? It might land on the $200. At first, Reuben was sceptical. The prize was for English, not law; and time was precious with the final examinations approaching. Fair enough, but could not this reservation be overcome by an essay on constitutional law, killing two birds with one stone?"

The strategy was accepted. The essay was written. It won the prize and the board bill was paid. The examination in constitutional law was passed. A brilliant career in law and business followed."

Mr. Chancellor, I salute you."

MULRONEY TAKES A SPRING BREAK AT DALHOUSIE

Somewhere amid defending his government's Goods and Services Tax, deflecting angry protests over the failing East Coast fishery and attempting to patch together a constitutional deal for Canada, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney spent just over an hour at Dalhousie in March.

But that seemed to be enough time to check out the Marine Gene Probe Laboratory — one of the central facilities associated with the new, federally supported Ocean Production Enhancement Network, which is involving scientists from a handful of Canadian universities (including Dalhousie) in the search for technology to help save the fishery — and answer a few questions from students and faculty at the law school.

The prime minister's whistle-stop tour, which coincided with the World Figure Skating Championships in Halifax, also included a lunch speech, sponsored by the Halifax Board of Trade, for nearly 300 local business and government leaders. Mulroney indicated that the Atlantic provinces were, in his opinion, poised for greatness as a full, participating member of Confederation.

Still, the prime minister's message was not entirely well received by various members of the local community. A mixed bag of protesters gathered in front of the law school, prior to his arrival, to let him know how they felt about the GST, fish plant closures and cuts in federal programs. One protester, dressed as the Grim Reaper carried a sign inviting

Mulroney to "do lunch."

Generally, however, the prime minister — whose recent failure to secure a constitutional consensus promises even more arduous times ahead for his government — seemed pleased with Dalhousie's comparative calm: The absence of politics perhaps?

PARKINSON'S TREATMENT: RESEARCH MOVES AHEAD

Alan Fine: Parkinson's researcher

"We are going as fast as caution will allow. We hope to be conducting the first patient trials by the end of the year" — Alan Fine

Dalhousie researcher and doctor Alan Fine says he could be ready to conduct the first patient trials of a groundbreaking treatment for Parkinson's disease by the end of the year. "We are going forward as fast as caution will allow. We hope to start the first trials by the end of the year. But it certainly won't be (earlier than that)."

The treatment — which emanates from research designed to perfect a method to transplant the embryonic brain cells of aborted fetuses into the brains of adults afflicted with Parkinson's disease — could theoretically lead to a reversal of the condition that afflicts about one in 2,000 adults.

Parkinson's disease is a neurological condition characterized by trembling and loss of muscular control. As time goes on, progressive degeneration of certain vital cells in the brain lead to the patient's physical deterioration and, through a variety of other complications, death.

Traditionally, treatment of the disease has involved large dosages of the drug L-dopa, which seems to improve the patient's ability to control his movements during the early stages. But, as the disease progresses, sufferers become less responsive to the chemical.

Fine, who operates out of offices at the Victoria General Hospital in Halifax, says that replacing damaged and decayed cells with healthy tissue holds out the most promise to eventually finding a cure for the disease.

But, for the time being, that level of success appears to be a long way down the road. "There are serious technical problems to overcome at this stage," Fine said. "There are still problems in terms of the database (of information).

Technical problems aside, the research sparked controversy earlier this year when local pro-life organizations waged a public campaign opposing such use of human tissue. And it's clear that opposition among certain segments of the community has not vanished. Diana Smith, spokesperson for

Council for Life Nova Scotia, said her organization is preparing a brief for presentation to Dalhousie University and the Victoria General. "Our opposition is not going to die. We are working with the Campaign Life Coalition."

Fine won approval to proceed with his research from the Victoria General — which will be supplying aborted fetuses to the team — after a complex, detailed 24-month review, which ended late last year, by a special hospital board ethics committee.

The Dalhousie scientist did not receive the final go-ahead, however, until the Nova Scotia Department of Health completed many months of assessment last February. Said VG spokesperson Eileen MacIsaac: "We recommended it (the procedure) to the province. It took months for the government to assess reaction."

Fine, who spent 10 years conducting studies in the United States before arriving at Dalhousie in the early 1980s, says he is relieved about the decision. "Of course I am happy that we are allowed to proceed with the research," he said.

"We recommended it (the procedure) to the province. It took months for the government to assess reaction" — Eileen MacIsaac, (Victoria General)

A lion of Canadian business settles into the chancellor's chair

(Albert Lee photos)

YOU MIGHT BE forgiven for failing to associate Reuben Cohen's name with one of the largest and most successful financial services companies in Canada. He is, at heart, a private man who prefers to avoid the glare of public attention. But the deputy chairman of Central Capital Corp. is also Dalhousie's new chancellor, a mantle of responsibility he's inherited from Lady Beaverbrook, who had been the university's ceremonial leader since 1968. And the Moncton-born, Dalhousie-educated (BA'42, LLB'44) businessman intends to tackle the job with characteristic enthusiasm and care. We spoke with him in May.

QUESTION: How were you approached for the position of chancellor of Dalhousie?

COHEN: I was approached by the president (Howard Clark). I did not accept it for at least several months after the initial approach. In fact my personal circumstances were such at the time that I didn't feel I could do the job adequately.

QUESTION: You changed your mind. You spent some time thinking about it. So what persuaded you to take the job after all?

COHEN: Well, there was a lot of heavy artillery brought in, including Henry Hicks

(former president of Dalhousie and retired senator), who is an old associate of mine. We go back a long number of years to the time when we were kids. I have a lot of affection for Henry. We have a lot of living that we did together. And Henry is pretty persuasive, you know. That was one of the things, and there were other considerations.

QUESTION: What did Dr. Hicks say about this job? Why did he think it was something that you should do?

COHEN: Well, I think that's something you should probably ask him... I wonder about that myself now. I thought that there would be other candidates who would possibly be able to offer better advantages for the university than I might be able to. But apparently, they told me that I was the unanimous choice... the only unanimous choice of all those people in the institutions and the university, including the faculty, who would have some input on the choice.

QUESTION: Have you had many meetings with Dr. Clark since the announcement of your appointment?

COHEN: A couple, yes.

QUESTION: How long have you been involved with Dalhousie?

COHEN: Oh... I was on the board of governors for 14 years. And I was chairman of the investment committee for about 10 of those. Henry Hicks originally asked me to go on... he wanted me to go on the investment committee, and in order to go on the committee, I had to be a member of the board. I said I just couldn't go to every meeting of the board of governors. Henry indicated to me that he didn't want me, necessarily, at the governors' meeting as long as I came to the investment committee. He didn't think he needed me to have a hand in trying to run the university. I couldn't run a university... I wouldn't know very much about running a university. But he said that as long as I had the input in the

"I think probably the private sector is going to be called upon and leaned upon more and more all the time. And I hope that I might be able to be of some use in that regard... The influence and the scope of Dalhousie is only contained because of the lack of funding in so many instances" investment committee that would be satisfactory... which I did. I think I only missed one meeting. And that was because of an aerial problem. I sat dejectedly at an airport, while the meeting was in progress.

QUESTION: Do you have any thoughts about financing in higher education?

COHEN: Well... Dalhousie doesn't have a long tradition of a chancellor's job. The first one was appointed only in the '40s when C.D. Howe came in... And he did his job well. Nova Scotia, I would say, would have more institutions of higher learning, per capita and per square foot, than any other part of North America. And they're all necessary. They're all needed to perform a useful function. But it's going to become harder and harder with economic restraints to have each of them funded. I think probably the private sector is going to be called upon and leaned upon more and more all the time. And I hope that I might be able to be of some use in that regard.

QUESTION: In regards to the private sector?

COHEN: I hope so.

The company that Cohen helped build, and now serves as deputy chairman, manages nearly $37 billion worth of assets

QUESTION: Things that have happened at Dalhousie over the last year have been quite exciting from a research and development side.

COHEN: Everything is exciting about the university. But then it's unfortunate that the influence and the scope of the university is only contained because of the lack of funding in so many instances... and that quite a bit of debt still has to be serviced. There are problems. But all universities have them in our country. The problem will be to try to get the maximum input to see how we can solve them.

QUESTION: Do you expect to spend much of your time in Halifax?

COHEN: The ceremonial part of it is just needed at the time of convocations. The chancellor also has the ex officio right to go to meetings of the board of governors, and offer his opinion. But as I said before, I don't think I have any great capacity and any knowledge and background in knowing how to run a university. I don't have any input in that regard. ♦

Dal-educated Dale Kavanagh, international guitar virtuoso, was back for a while this winter. But if you blinked you probably missed her

By Alexander Bruce

This is not the European concert circuit where she has won rave reviews for her musical virtuosity. It's not even the Sir James Dunn Theatre in Dalhousie Arts Centre where she has delighted hundreds with her range and repertoire. It's her cramped office in the Dalhousie Music Department, and something about the way Dale Kavanagh is playing the short, complicated classical guitar solo suggests her mind is on something else right now. Like the bags she'll soon be packing.

It is April, and after seven months of stepping in for Dalhousie guitar master, Carol van Feggelen — who has been on sabbatical — the Nova Scotia native and Dal alumnus is coming to terms with her imminent departure. She's thinking about engagements in the United States, Greece and Switzerland, and her first solo recording on compact disk, this summer. She's thinking about her home in Cologne, West Germany, where she has lived for the past five years, and about leaving Nova Scotia for the second time in her life. And, she says, "I don't want to go."

But the world refuses to wait much longer for Kavanagh. It wants her back at centre stage, where the praise for her skill has been effusive. "Besides the internationally well known names like Andres Segovia, Julian Bream and John Williams, there are quite a few guitarists who play just as well," De Gelderlander of Holland recently gushed. "Last night, the young Canadian, Dale Kavanagh, who presented herself in Nimegen proved that point again."

Musikblatt magazine of West Germany said a year ago: "The highlight of the Third Kreuzberger Guitar Days was without a doubt the Berlin debut of Dale Kavanagh. Her concert was successful in every respect. This young guitarist amazed the Berlin public." Guitar and Lute Magazine of Sweden: "Dale Kavanagh... is comparable with the great performers and musicians." Berliner Morgenpost of West Germany: "(She) is a well-rounded, brilliant guitarist."

Her awards are easily as impressive. She received top honors in 1988 at the Scandinavian International Guitar Competition; second prize at the Neuchatel International Guitar Competition in Switzerland; third prize at the Gargnano International Guitar Competition in Italy; and third prize at the Segovia Guitar Competition in Spain.

Kavanagh says classical guitarists must cultivate international reputations to survive. And at this stage in her career, she wouldn't contemplate travelling any path other than the winding one she has chosen. But there is special poignancy in this departure. Nova Scotia, particularly Dalhousie, is where it all began for her 15 years ago.

Born in Halifax and raised in Wolfville, Kavanagh was never far from music. She started piano lessons when she was only five years old. At seven, she began clarinet; at 10, she discovered the guitar. As a teenager, she played guitar professionally in folk and jazz bands. After hearing classical guitarist Oscar Ghiglia perform in the Acadia University Performing Arts series in 1975, she decided to seek formal training. "I didn't know what I was getting into," she says. "I took classical guitar to improve my technique and I got hooked. I fell in love with it."

At Dalhousie, Kavanagh studied under van Feggelen, an internationally known guitarist and teacher who had attended master classes of the great Andres Segovia. Kavanagh became so accomplished that she completed graduate studies at the University of Toronto and the Banff Centre School of Fine Arts before earning a bachelor's degree from Dalhousie. (She's has since finished her undergraduate work).

She also received a Diploma di Merito from the Accademia Chigiana in Siena, Italy and a Solisten Diploma from the Musik Akademie der Stadt Basel in Switzerland. Her teachers, since van Feggelen, included Eli Kassner and Oscar Ghiglia.

Kavanagh's repertoire amounts to 22 composers from renaissance to contemporary periods. The compositions are familiar to followers of classical guitar. What distinguishes her from other guitarists, according to critics, is not so much her technique — which is nonetheless superb — but her musical virtuosity. She has what one local reviewer recently characterized as a "light, precise touch... It is her musicality that impresses the most. Her Praetorious Dances from Terpsichore had the lilt and thrust on the first beats that makes early dance style come off the page... Benjamin Britten's Nocturnal... suited Kavanagh's intensity and musical penetration as though it had been written for her."

Kavanagh says that achieving a high level of technical skill is essential for any performer. But truly great musicians establish a signature for themselves, a sound of mood and tone that interprets the composition. And so it is right now with her in her office at Dalhousie as she plays the brief melody quietly, delicately and, as she contemplates hitting the road again, perhaps a little mournfully. ♦

Judith Fingard, dedicated chronicler of Halifax's rich and sometimes dark past, is the new head of graduate studies. But Dal's first woman dean isn't worried. She's used to wearing many hats

... At Dal in 1964: first class honors

History in the making

By Annabel Bruce

Balanced on Judith Fingard's head is a column of invisible hats. There's the deerstalker for digging up forgotten ghosts for her history books, the mortarboard for lecturing — which she's been doing at Dalhousie's history department since 1967 — and the hat she wore last year as co-ordinator of the Women's Studies Program.

But when Fingard became dean of graduate studies on July 1, she donned her biggest hat yet. "Actually, it's more of an umbrella," says the 47-year-old historian, referring to her new position. "(The office) oversees 35 student programs. On the administrative level, we regulate the kinds of students who are coming in. On the maintenance level, we monitor the programs to make sure they're doing what we want. And at the end of the process, we judge the graduate theses."

The mere thought of managing so many different programs would scare off many professors. But Fingard knows what she's getting into. Last year, she was assistant dean, and she understands how students themselves can add to the administrative confusion.

"Maybe it's because they're older and life's more complicated," says Fingard, who graduated from Dalhousie in 1964 with a first-class honors BA in history, and from the University of London with a master's in 1967 and a PhD in 1970, both in history. "But graduate students get into the most awful problems."

Fortunately for the Faculty of Graduate Studies, Fingard has a passion for solving problems. Just reading the list of administrative accomplishments contained in her resume is an endurance test. Since 1971, she has taken part in 51 committees, including Dalhousie ones for day care, salary reviews, the art gallery, and the research and development fund for humanities and social sciences; and community-based ones for metro inter-university women's studies, the selection of Maritime Rhodes Scholars and the Canadian Historical Association. Is she, perhaps, a little committee happy? "I don't think I do any more than anyone else. Now you know what we do all day."

But this historian doesn't spend all her time in meeting rooms. "My first love is research," says Fingard who's working on sequels to two of her books, The Dark Side of Life in Victorian Halifax, and Jack in Port: Sailortowns of Eastern Canada.

In her sequel to The Dark Side, she's shifting the story from the poorhouse crowd to the upwardly mobile: "People who went from being rough to respectable. The group I'm looking at produced the first generation of university-going children."

She's also researching veterans and blacks who had to overcome great odds to succeed — the penniless West Indian sailors, soldiers, and slaves who became service, delivery, and transport workers. She's particularly interested in the struggle of blacks, in the 1870s and 1880s, to overcome poor schooling.

In the follow-up to Jack In Port, she's studying bluenose ship masters — captains and skippers. Before she's finished that book, she figures she'll have examined the lives of 2,000 to 2,500 people.

These are long-range projects, and she doesn't think she'll get much book work done during her first year as dean. But she adds resolutely: "I refuse to become a slave to an administrative job."

She admits that she was a little frantic last year as she raced from her post as assistant dean to the university's history department, and then to her job as co-ordinator of the Women's Studies Program. But when her stack of hats barely swayed in the wind, the committee searching for a new dean realized Fingard was the right person to take over from Kenneth T. Leffek, who'd held the job for 18 years. If anyone could juggle the myriad responsibilities associated with supervising 35 separate programs, she could.

Express any sexist doubts about her succeeding in her new job (How will she find time to spend with her 16-year-old daughter Clio and her husband, part-time Dalhousie history professor Peter Burroughs?), and she might turn on you and recount some history. "At a recent thesis review I attended," she says almost gleefully, "the student, the student's supervisor, and all but one person on the committee were women."

Fingard's already got big plans for the dean's office. "I think the dean can take a more directional role — more involvement, but more delegation, as well. Basically, I want to review structures and procedures." That sounds pretty staid for Fingard, who's known as something of a reformer for her work at the Women's Studies Program. But then she adds, "I have to consult more, but I'm being encouraged to make some changes." Specifically? "We have a lot of meetings the dean is not involved in that I'd like to attend to add continuity."

And she's already weaving her research skills into her new job. "I want to talk to all the members of the departments and find out what the problems are, the ambitions, the programs they'd like to see implemented. And I want to discuss policy issues."

A 1989 review recommended that the graduate faculty should have a higher profile. "I say, 'Why?' We don't just want to strut around," Fingard says. "On the other hand, this is where the essential research is done — where you perpetuate the university itself."

There's another reason why the dean of graduate studies will move into the spotlight in coming years. "If you believe what people are saying — that our university population is of a certain age, and that by the year 2000 there's going to be a real shortage of professors — then we have to start planning now."

Part of Fingard's plan is to attract more Canadian scholars to graduate programs at Dalhousie in an effort — among other things — to produce future faculty members. To do so, the Faculty of Graduate Studies will have to offer more appealing scholarship packages. "At least 50 per cent of the graduates are scholarship students and many look on scholarships as salaries. We've been relying on the Killam money for so long. We still do. But it's just not going far enough any more," says Fingard, who chaired the Killam Scholarship Committee in 1986-87. "We need more Killams."

She'll probably have to act as a fundraiser on top of all her other responsibilities. But for Fingard, what's another hat? ♦

"We've been relying on the Killam money for so long. We still do. But it's just not going far enough any more. We need more Killams"

One historian's "gallery of jailbirds." Fingard has also belonged to no fewer than 51 Dalhousie and community-based committees over the past two decades

Dalumni: Foreign students need your help

Dalhousie hosts more than 500 overseas students from all over the world — from Antigua to Zambia. And last year, for the first time, the university welcomed more than 200 new international students.

The university's International Student Centre is responsible for helping these people settle into campus life and adjust to a new, and often strange, land. But Dalhousie's alumni can also help in important ways.

We at the centre want our international students to return to their homes with more than just a degree. We want them to leave with fond memories of the people they got to know while they attended school here. We want them to understand our culture and customs a little better than they might have, had they found few friends. And, importantly, we want them to stay in touch with those friends after they leave. They should be our ambassadors; and we should try to make them feel welcome.

From the moment they step off the plane, though, many foreign students face serious problems. Often, their arrival marks the first time they have been separated from their families and homeland. Often, they have been saturated with information about what they should expect in the new land. They are exhausted, anxious and afraid.

They hope that someone is waiting for them when they arrive at the airport. They hope that someone can tell them where they should go and what they should do next. They worry about obtaining affordable housing or about being able to settle in one place long enough to concentrate on their studies. Many long for home.

At the student centre, we do our best to prepare foreign students for their new lives. All students from abroad at Dalhousie are sent a flyer

MEETINGS AND AWARDS

Dr. Howard Clark, president of Dalhousie University; David Almon, president of the Alumni Association; and Betty Flinn, alumni director, hosted a reception in Bermuda. Gudrun Curri, university registrar, also attended. Alumni, parents of alumni and prospective students were invited. Chapter president Bill Jack welcomed guests at the Stonington Beach Hotel, Paget, Bermuda.

Dalhousie law graduate Peter Dalglish, founder of Street Kids International — an organization dedicated to helping underprivileged children around the world — spoke recently at a dinner organized by the newly-formed Calgary branch of the Dalhousie Alumni Association. The chapter was formed last October when interim officers were elected. Alumni in the Calgary area are invited to contact Peter Merchant at Trizec Equities Ltd., (403) 269-0742.

The income earned from a fund established in memory of Dr. John P. Laba by family, friends, patients and colleagues, will provide for this award which may be given annually. The recipient will be a dentist accepted in the first year of the graduate program in oral and maxillofacial surgery and will be given exclusively for the presentation, dissemination and/or publication of research related to the field. For further information, please contact Dr. D.S. Precious, Department of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery.

with instructions and a tear-out section to be mailed back to us before they leave home. This way, we can arrange for someone to meet their plane and to set aside cheap, temporary accommodation.

The first few days of an international student's life in Canada are crucial. And the most serious problem, by far, is finding permanent living quarters. The students need to be able to read a map, understand our banking system, know where to find cheap furniture and many other little things that can easily mushroom into major difficulties if not handled sensitively by others.

When these bread-and-butter troubles are behind them, foreign students often begin to feel lonely. Fortunately, most form support systems and communities to help them through bleak times. But much more could be done.

We need people who might have a room or cot available for a couple of days during the first two weeks of September. This would help us out should we encounter difficulties in arranging temporary accommodations.

Beyond this, alumni can help by becoming host families. This means becoming a friend to an international student and his or her family. You would invite the student to your house to share family activities occasionally. You would provide the student with a chance to become part of this country's way of life. Host families learn a lot about other cultures; and most feel they are richer because of the experience.

Dalhousie graduates could also offer their services as English language tutors. Many international students and their spouses would love to be tutored on a one-on-one basis. It helps them gain confidence quickly.

Alumni can provide many services to help international students. Call the International Student Centre at Dalhousie.

Mini-University is a fun-filled educational program that gives students a meaningful learning opportunity, combining education and recreation. It is designed to give students, aged 10 to 15, experience of some of the careers open to them, as well as an introduction to lifetime recreational sports. Students spend one hour daily in five different instructional programs, and will finish each day with the fun of a recreational activity at Dalplex. The programs are organized in modules, which are offered in each of two 14-day sessions. The modules consist of the following disciplines: Dentistry, Law, Theatre Arts, Pharmacy, Geology, Recreation at Dalplex. Each participant will receive a two-week pass to Dalplex and graduation certificate upon completion of the course. Students may bring lunches, purchase them at the Dalplex canteen. Enrollment is limited.

Cost: $195 per session

TRANQUIL NOVA SCOTIA

The deep, restful quiet of a Nova Scotia forest.

Quiet that's only enhanced by a bird's song,
the rustle of leaves and the lap of waves on the shore.

MARITIME PARKLANDS

We're offering just such peace of mind at a limited number of secluded lakefront properties in Nova Scotia's most beautiful unspoiled settings.

Only about an hour from the city, in Lunenburg County, their privacy, tranquility and natural environment are protected for you and future generations.

YOU'LL HEAR THE QUIET, ALWAYS

Our unique set of environmental covenants ensure your enjoyment of Nova Scotia's natural tranquility.

Nature, recreation and relaxation will never have to compete with motorboats, ATV's and snowmobiles.

When you leave the city's noise behind, it won't follow you.

At Maritime Parklands
Tranquil Nova Scotia is now within earshot.

Make The Investment of a Lifetime

The Dalhousie Black & Gold Club was established in 1983 to promote and enhance the varsity program at Dalhousie.

Since then, over 1000 young student athletes have gained a multitude of benefits from the program.

Here is what some of them have to say about the Dalhousie Black & Gold Club:

"I gained a tremendous number of benefits from my association with the Black & Gold Club, and as a Board Member now, I like to think that perhaps I'll be able to give something back to this supportive group."
Paul Herron (hockey) - B.Rec. 1987

"The support of the Club throughout the year and its staging of the Awards Banquet at the end of the year is a tremendous boost to all of us."
Lucy Smith (cross country, track and field) - B.A. student

Annual dues ($100-$300, or more if you wish) go toward tutoring athletic awards & scholarships, newsletters, the Annual Athletic Banquet, and a number of other initiatives, all designed to assist athletes. Tax receipts are issued to members.

But financial support is only part of the story. As a member of the Dalhousie Black & Gold Club, you will have the opportunity of meeting and talking with Tiger athletes, of seeing them perform, of offering moral support and advice — in general, playing a role in the growth of tomorrow's leaders.

And that's an investment of a lifetime.

DR. FREDERICK C. McLELLAN, BA'29, MD'33, of Old Bennington, Vt., passed away at 82 on May 6, 1989. Dr. McLellan was born in Nova Scotia and, after his studies, became a well-known urologist in the United States. He was director of urology at the New Rochelle Hospital Medical Centre for 30 years until his retirement in 1972.

— IN MEMORIUM —

DR. F. HILTON PAGE, Dalhousie professor and chair of the university's philosophy department for many years, died in February, 1990, at the age of 84. He was a member of the faculty of both Dalhousie University and King's College for a record 56 years, and held senior administrative posts throughout his career. He was regarded by colleagues and students as one of the most learned scholars on campus.

Dr. Page's family has requested that donations be made to the university to which he dedicated his life, in lieu of other memorials. An F. Hilton Philosophy Prize has been established. Donations may be made to the F. H. Page Fund, c/o The Development Office, Dalhousie University.

The century turned 70, and Dalhousie knew which way the wind blew

By Alexander Bruce

Three days after Richard Nixon called them "bums" for opposing his policies in Viet Nam, four students were killed by Ohio National Guardsmen at a protest rally at Kent State University. And in that year, 1970, college kids all over North America began thinking their identification cards were hardly more than passes into occupied territory.

At Dalhousie, life was more tranquil, but the violence and dislocation of the times did not escape the attention of the student newspaper, whose writers found a sort of nervous comfort in the fact that the world's woes had not yet broken down their door. "Our community may be sympathetic," said the Gazette in an editorial announcing the imminent arrival on campus of two members of the Black Panther party, "But our community is not occupied by a police army in the same way that the black community is; our community does not have the same high rate of unemployment as the black community has; our community does not have the same degree of exploitation by merchants and landlords as the black community has; and our community has not seen their brothers murdered in their beds."

It was the year that Libyan military strongman, Colonel Moammar Khadafy, at the age of 27, assumed power in his country; the year students at the University of Wisconsin, protesting war research, blew up a laboratory, killing one person; the year the Grey Panthers were founded by Philadelphia native Margaret Kuhn; and the year the world's population reached 3.63 billion.

Closer to home, 1970 was the year of the October Crisis and the War Measures Act. It was the year of a total eclipse of the sun in Nova Scotia; the year the A. Murray MacKay Bridge formerly opened over Halifax's harbor, and the provincial Liberal party formed a government under premier-elect Gerald A. Regan. In 1970, Glen Gibson bagged the biggest bluefin tuna then on record (1,065 lbs.) at River Bourgeois, and the Atlantic Cinderella became the first ship to unload its cargo at the new Port of Halifax container pier.

Throughout the world, environmentalists declared April 21 Earth Day, and staged the first mass demonstrations against pollution. In Nova Scotia, ecologists organized the "Encounter on the Environment" symposium only 20 days after the oil tanker Arrow went aground at Cerebus Rock, Strait of Canso, spilling tons of heavy crude. "In a few years, giant supertankers will be using the same channel as the ill-fated Arrow," declared one writer in the Dalhousie Gazette. "Hopefully, this disaster is not a preview of things to come."

In 1970, the battle for the hearts and minds of Dalhousie's students was under way. And, like many other college papers of the time, the Gazette carried a fashionably leftist banner into the war against, what its writers knew to be the real enemy of mankind, apathy. It screamed at readers to wake up to the fact that "War is over, if we want it... Love and peace." It demanded that people know that a "Conspiracy court shafts five of 'Chicago 7'."

But the turbulence of the world outside Dalhousie was not the only grist for the newspaper's mill. There was plenty to worry about right here at home, on campus. Editorial writers were particularly concerned about the composition and accountability of the university's board of governors. In story after story, it demanded changes to the governing council, whose activities were "not relevant" to the true aspirations of the student body.

Precisely what those aspirations were was occasionally difficult even for Gazette writers to fix with any certainty. The pages that carried news of the world, also carried reports of time-honored and distinctly non-political events such as Winter Carnival. "Hot and Cold will be the theme of this year's (event)," wrote the Gazette. "Participation is the basic aim of the carnival... Campus societies will try their best to make fools of themselves, often succeeding."

Of course, the newspaper's often schizophrenic vision of the world always failed to persuade some readers. One person wrote, "that those people who wish to contribute to the university life would do better to contribute articles that reflect the purpose and intent of university education."

In 1970, that is precisely what student reporters and writers believed they were doing. ♦
